PREFACE.

This publication is an index, and in no sense a digest. It only undertakes to cite the chapter or book and page where an act may be found. When the compiler took up this work it was his intention to make reference to every Act of Assembly which does not appear in any digest of the general laws of this State, but it became apparent that the faithful execution of the plan would make the index so bulky and expensive as to render the undertaking impracticable. But a careful examination disclosed the fact that much of our local legislation consists of acts which had no general interest whatever when they were enacted and which have long since become obsolete. To include reference to such enactments would encumber the work without increasing its value to the profession.

Reference to acts relating to an entire county will be found under the name of the county; legislation relating to a city, borough or township is indexed under the name of the city, borough or township within the particular county, and nowhere else.

The index to acts relating to boundaries of the state, large streams in their entirety, industries which are local but not confined to any particular county or counties named, and acts relating to corporations other than municipal or quasi-municipal, are arranged in groups in the latter part of the volume.

Therefore, in looking for acts relating to highways, bridges, schools, licenses, cattle, strays, fences, etc., search should be made under the name of the city, borough or township as well as under the name of the subject of inquiry. When the search relates to a corporation, the act of incorporation should invariably be consulted.

A law enacted for one of the older counties would, if unrepealed, be operative in counties subsequently erected out of the same territory. Lackawanna county would be affected by laws enacted for Bucks county prior to 1752, by laws enacted for Northampton county from 1752 to 1786, and by laws enacted for Luzerne county from 1786 to 1878, and so with many other counties. Many of the counties are composed of territory formerly embraced in two or more of the older counties, and hence it is manifest that a part of a county might be affected by one ancient law and another part of the same county by another.

Local enactments constitute a surprisingly large part of our legislation prior to 1874, and although many of them are now obsolete and many others have little interest at the present time, except to the curious or the historical student, still a large part of our local affairs is governed by special acts which do not appear in any digest. Without such an index as this they can only be found by searching through the several indices of the pamphlet laws. These indices are about seventy-five in number, compiled at different times by different persons without uniformity of plan and in many instances inaccurate. It is a serious task to find all local legislation relating to any subject, or even to find any certain act unless one knows where to look.

Our special legislation has now practically ceased, and it might be supposed that much of it would soon be repealed, but during the twenty years elapsed since the adoption of the new constitution very little progress has been made in that direction. The people seem to object to having their local legislation superseded by general laws, and it is noteworthy that many late enactments provide that they shall not be operative in counties in which the same subject is governed by local acts. It is, therefore, safe to say that for years to come frequent reference will have to be made to local laws. There is a large class of important special legislation which will never be superseded. Acts enabling persons acting in a fiduciary capacity to sell land, the vacation and alteration of streets and those granting special privileges relating to roads, bridges and ferries, belong to this class. Important interests depend upon the numerous acts of Assembly which declare certain streams public highways. The right of possession of much valuable land depends wholly upon the acts of Assembly vacating or altering streets.

Every county in the state is governed, either in whole or in part, by local legislation relating to roads and bridges, and the care and employment of the poor. The municipal affairs of three-fourths of the boroughs of the state are regulated by special charters and amendments thereto. The proceedings in every county court in the state are affected by special legislation.

Smith's Laws being more generally accessible than the original acts prior to 1823, it has been deemed best to cite them by chapter, thus: Ch. 3800 indicates Chapter 3800 of Smith's Laws, while subsequent to that date citations are to the year and page of the pamphlet laws, thus: '50-269 indicates that the act may be found in the pamphlet laws of 1850 on page 269.

The compiler desires to acknowledge the valuable assistance rendered by many members of the bar throughout the state to whom he is indebted for the use of manuscript or other evidences of their labor in the same line, which he has compared with his own, hoping thereby to secure greater accuracy.
